

Are you a strategic academic? Some tips for a successful career in academe

Shelda Debowski
University of Notre Dame

Academic careers are challenging, in that they offer many avenues that might be pursued, but require careful consideration of the likely consequences. In this workshop you will have an opportunity to review your academic career and to plan for the next stages. We will explore the notion of academic identity and the way it can assist in guiding academic decisions. Facilitative supports, including mentorship, will also be discussed.

This will be an ideal opportunity to think afresh about how your career is shaping. This workshop is suited to all career levels.
